SMALL CITIES BEST?

SEE THAT Roger W. Babson, the American economist and writer, has been proffering some advice to young people starting out on a career, through the medium of a syndicated column headed "Small Cities Best."

And I found it a little bit disturbing in that he places the strongest emphasis on the futility of young people trying to settle down and raise families in the largest cities, on the grounds that, in the event of World War Three, these centres ould be the first targets of enemy atom bombs. In fact he can so far as to warn his young compatriots that to take new bbs in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Baltimore, Boston, Pittsburgh, Washington, D.C. and San Francisco would be "almost suicidal."

IN SUPPORT of his argument, Mr. Babson claims that a study of the latest atomic bomb information indicates that about sixty miles from the centre of a big city, comparable in size to those aforementioned, is the safest location.

In such a spot you would then be free from bombing and from radio-active waves. Furthermore, you would also escape from the refugee problem which, in his opinion, would be very serious to suburbanites of a big city. And he quotes Washington as authority for the assumption that the particular cities mentioned are most likely to be bombed in the event of another world war.

GLOOMY PROSPECT

DON'T for one moment doubt that Mr. Babson feels fully I justified in proffering such advice to young people about to take new jobs and settle down. But if their futures are to be predicted on such a grim prospect then that future is certainly a very gloomy one.

And his suggestion that to settle in the particular cities mentioned is "almost suicidal" is hardly calculated to inspire that feeling of security which, we are given to understand on all sides, is the goal of most job-seekers these days. NOT EVERYTHING

HOWEVER, I happen to be one of those queer people who think that security is not everything. True, it means quite a lot when you get on into what have been called the declining years—although few people seem inclined to decline anything these days.

But I would hate to think that young people—whether Canadians or Americans—have got to the point where they start out their careers imbued with the idea that security is what counts the most, either in the physical or economic sense. For it implies a lack of initiative and zest for adventure without which life would be very dull indeed.

CITY OF AGED

AND IF BIG metropolises are to be shunned by young people just starting out on life because of some possibility of an ck by atomic bombs, then it would be a sorry thing, attack by atomic bombs, then it would be a not only for the communities concerned, which soon develop into congregations of middle-aged and aged folk, but for the young people themselves.

After all, if we are to believe all we hear about atomic bombs they, like the rain, will fall on the just as well as the unjust, the young as well as the old. And I doubt that, if another world conflagration really does come, anyone will be able to escape the ramifications of its catastrophic impact on civilization even if he manages to find a hideout temporarily secure from the immediate impact of the new weapons

TOO GLOOMY

SO I, FOR ONE, refuse to be downcast by any such gloomy prophecy—even though I believe that more attention might well be paid to the efforts being made in Canada to enlist active support for, and participation in, civil defense measures.

But when it comes to warning young people not to look for jobs in big cities because of their possibility of being turned into future Hiroshimas, it seems to me a bit too drastic. But then I am not an economist.

The Birth of a Profession

How the practice of the healing arts first came into existence is unknown. Undoubtedly a sickness prompted someone to do something for an ailing friend or relative. The value of herbs may have been discovered by accident or by observing the habits of sick animals. Pharmacy had its birth when the first herb was processed prior to administration. Today no profession is more highly specialized. It is based on scientific fact. Centuries of medical progress and years of experience and formal education form the background for the service rendered by pharmacists of today. We appreciate the opportunity to serve.

A Compromise Decision

THE THREE CENT INCREASE IN the price of milk, recommended by the Milk Board and approved by the provincial cabinet, will please neither of the parties chiefly concerned. Producers, who stated at the recent enquiry that they must receive $6.72 per cwt. to meet their rising costs, will now re-ceive $5.90, up 90 cents from the previ-ous base price. They will protest that the increase is not enough. Consumers, on the other hand, faced with a 24-cent quart next Tuesday morning, will de-nounce the increase as a further levy on the staple diet of infants, growing children and the population in general. It is plain that the Milk Board has sought a middle course, and it cannot be blamed for failing to solve what is in reality world-wide problem—the rising cost

The producers have made out an impressive case in their request for an augmented income. The cost of labor, feed, equipment, freight and other production components has soured. While there are always marginal producers who are on the verge of operating at a loss, the present emergency appears to have hit many dairy farmers normally classed as efficient. It is commonly found that island farmers apparently making their dairies pay are evading the full demands of normal industrial production—they are working hours un-acceptable to labor in general, they are employing their wives and sons at less than prevailing wages. To this extent, low milk prices could in some cases be recognized as the result of undue demands for sacrifices on the part of some

Distributors, who will also share in the announced increase, have reported similar pressure due to rising costs. Their position, however, has not in general been so critical as that of the

The fact which gives especial impact to any increase in the cost of milk to the consumer is the universality of demand.

As a basic diet factor in most families cannot readily be replaced by a sub stitute of equal food value. There is a widespread feeling that milk, like bread, water and air, should not be made in accessible to even the poorest family.

While a food of such importance has a fairly inelastic demand, there can be little doubt that a three-cent price in-crease will result in lowered consumption in many cases — possibly in families whose health can least afford this re-duction. Figures published on this page earlier this year showed that in 1950 Greater Victoria consumed one-third of a quart of milk per day per capita. This is likely to have decreased, rather than increased, during the ensuing time. Yet the recognized minimum consumption for health is a pint a day for adults and a pint and a half, if not two pints, for children. Twenty-four-cent milk may be expected still further to lower the local average.

With a full realization of the essential nature of milk, it cannot be argued that its price has risen out of proportion to that of other staple commodities. Statistics show that in the 1939 to 1951 period, during which milk (with Tues-day's increase included) has risen 95.9 per cent, some foods have far exceeded this. Beef, in this time, has increased in price 356 per cent, bacon 162 per cent, grade A eggs 215 per cent and flour 101 per cent. Some other commodities with lesser rises, are still within the same inflationary bracket. These include, for instance, sugar, with an increase of 72 per cent, tea 74 per cent, tomatoes 87 per cent. Statistically, milk prices are still in line with other foods. Sociologically—that is, from the stand-point of the public welfare—the position may be less defensible.

The present situation gives renewed point to suggestions designed to reduce the delivery costs of milk. Deliveries on alternate days with consequent savings in bulk purchasing, more economica handling methods through redesign of trucks, bottles and other equipment, have been proposed and, in some cities, put into effect. Such devices no doubt will be re-examined with greater attennow be re-examined with greater attention. The basic principle that in a land of plenty no family should fear malnu-trition is still operative.

No More Toothache?

IN AN ERA WHEN ATOMIC POWER, space ships and other scientific mar-vels capture the news headlines, another research of possibly even greater immediate interest to human beings has passed relatively unnoticed. Ottawa has now released the results of a six-year test of the effect of fluorine on tooth decay, and the report opens the way to a new age free from this distressing and almost universal ailment Introduced into the drinking water supply, the chemical, entirely unnoticehas been found to reduce tooth decay among children. that decay may eventually be almost eliminated.

In Brantford, Ont., the water was artificially fluorinated. At Stratford, the water contains a natural fluorine content, Sarnia was left without fluorine, as a basis for the test. It was found that in Stratford there was less tooth decay among children than in either of the other cities, that the situa-tion has been improving in Brantford since 1948, but that in Sarnia decay has been on the increase throughout the Seventy-eight per cent of Stratford children between the ages of six and eight show no decay of their teeth. In Brantford the proportion of such lucky children has increased from 47 per cent to 60 per cent since 1948. In Sarnia, however, the city without fluorine, only 33 per cent of the children of this age group are free from decay, a decrease from 41 per cent three years ago. The figures should satisfy all reasonable

The fluorine treatment was stumbled on by accident, after children in certain communities in the United States were found to be unusually free from tooth trouble. The determining factor was found in the water, containing a percen-tage of the chemical, which hardens the enamel of the young, growing tooth. The Ottawa report is the first conclusion to be drawn from a Canadian test. We may look forward to further studies, and possibly universal use of the new preventive.

Good Time for a Nest Egg

DESPITE RECENT ALTERATIONS and improvements, Victoria's City Hall is not an ideal building for the purpose it seeks to serve. To some degree its obsolescence has been overcome, but only the most imaginative citizen could consider it adequate for future needs.

At the same time, conditions today not warrant expenditure on a new building. Costs are too high, governas in others, are imposing a substantial burden on the taxpayers, and construc-

Economics Takes Prior Position On Agenda As Atlantic Pact Nations Meet In Ottawa

THE meeting of the Atlantic Council, which starts in Ottawa on Sept. 17, may be the beginning of a completely phase in the development of the untic Community. It certainly will be if the French get their way. The new thing about this meeting is not only that for the first time the 12 NATO members are sending their finance and defence ministers as well as their foreign secretaries. It is that for the first time the su-taries. It is that for the first time the supreme council of this defensive alliance may not discuss military affairs at all.

It's still uncertain as I write whether the military organizations of the Pact will even submit a report. Probably they will; but it will be an interim affair, and it will be very much a sideline to the main business of the conference.

The main talk will not be about how Europe, but about how to pay for those already promised.

For the first time the Council will have before it a report from its Financial and Economic Board, which will a least provide a factual background for comparing the defense effort of different countries. It will also hear a report from each country about how it is getting on with its rearmament program. Here there will be a great contrast between the British and French positions, unless by chance Hugh Gaitskell and Rene Mayer have reached a common approach during their discussions with the U.S. Government in Washington. As they surely should do, for both are worried by much the same problems.

The French Government makes no bones about it. The spreading inflation and the increase in world prices which have taken place since last December have had more serious effects here than they have in Canada-where, dear knows, we have made enough fuss about them. They have increased the strain on the French budget to the point where France cannot carry through its promised pro-gram without increased financial help. This is the line that the French Government is taking. Planned defense expenditure next year would leave an enormous budget deficit. In an economy strained as this one is, that deficit cannot be made good without external aid. That aid muss be provided or the French program of rearmament must be delayed if not reduced.

"We have nothing to hide," said one of M. Mayer's associates to me. "M. Mayer will expose the whole position to Washington. What he says will be supported by the report of NATO's own Financial and Economic Board. We are not ashamed of being poor; our poverty arose from our efforts and sufferings in two world wars."

The French Government is in entire The French Government is in entire agreement with a recent headline in the newspaper Le Monde: "Europe cannot contemplate security at the cost of decline." People must be sure they have something worth defending.

As seen from here, the British situation is not essentially different; but the British Government persistently refuses to go begging for aid. I'm not sure how much conviction there is in the brave statements of British officials. There is some pride; some belief that it's better not to ask for aid till the need is so critical as to be obvious; and—I suspect—more than a little of party politics. Aneurin Bevan is trying to convince Britain that the rearmament program is suicidal: Morrison and Gaitskell and Attsuicidal: Morrison and Gaitskell and Attlee are promising something very like "rearmament without tears." The French just don't believe the promises.

The Ottawa meeting is not likely to provide ready or comprehensive answers to the European dilemma. But it will be brought face to face with the glaring inequality of sacrifice in the present defense plans. Rearmament cannot get much further without hurting. The European effort may look small beside the American, if not beside the Canadian.
But Canada might well inscribe the parable of the Widow's Mite upon the walls of the conference room in the Ottawa Parliament buildings.

Chips Off The Old Brock

By DAVID BROCK

A FRIEND OF MINE who lives in A FRIEND OF MINE who lives in foreign parts has gradually grown unused to Canadian ways, even though he still takes Canadian papers. The other day he was aghast and agog to read a recruiting appeal, published by I will not say what unit . . . except to say it was a Reserve Army unit, so that matters of pay, etc., did not matter quite so much as the advertisement-as the advertisement hinted. It stressed pay, grub, beds, and trans-port, and it especially wanted to draw to our Brock attention the fact that any man in this unit could easily quit whenever he liked, provided he turned in the equipment he no longer wanted. No mention of duty or of the present emergency. You will observe that while the old advertising technique does its best to sound attractive, it seldom tries to attract what is known as a man's better nature, and it can be got at, too. But advertising technicians do not always appreciate this, being brought up to have a contempt for human nature.

WELL, MY FRIEND mailed this advertisement to me with the com ment: "What a way to raise an army! The only thing I have seen to surpass this is a poster an American friend showed me. It is an appeal for recruits for a Northern cavalry regiment in the Civil War. It advised the prospective warrior that the cavalry was the most glorious and least dangerous arm of the service, and that it was intended to live on the rebels, thus ensuring the finest Southern-bred mounts, etc., etc.,

ARCHAEOLOGY

EVERY TIME I read in the papers about the death of some eccentric recluse whose home was found by the place to be crammed solid with junk, I say to myself "I really must tidy my study." Sometimes I say this just to soothe my wife, and at other times I Last week I actually prodded myself into something like action. whirled round and round my study, rais ing a minor cylone which blew enough papers and other junk out the door and windows to enable me to see clear down to the floor, in spots.

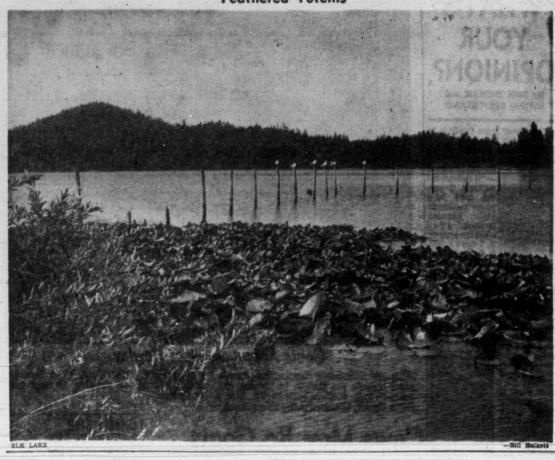

And what a harvest I reaped from that whirlwind! After accusing my young of stealing all the pencils in the house, I found 59 pencils, many of them in excellent shape. I found over two big waste-paper baskets' worth of funny press cuttings which no longer seemed funny. I found a few letters more than two years old which still require an answer (how surprised people are goiing to be when they hear from me!), but I found many hundreds of letters which it is quite useless to answer now. One of these letters, by the way, urged me to buy a stock at 25c a share, and I see it now fetches about $5 a share. On the other hand, another letter urged me to buy a stock at 25c, and this one now is quoted at 3c. So I guess I broke even by doing nothing about either of them.

T WAS FASCINATED by the enormous piles of little memoranda . . . jokes from real life that I wanted to preserve, and ideas for stories and rhymes and articles, and urgent reminders to myself of things that needed doing without delay. Some of these notes are well worth keeping. Others are now simply meaningless . . I haven't the faintest idea what they are about, even when I Some of these notes are well

But a third class of note pleases me best: it is the urgent memo that is no longer urgent. The time and worry and expense I have saved by doing nothing whatever about these pressing matters is staggering. And it fills me with the warmest sense of "something accom-plished, something done," and makes me feel rather wise and prudent, somehow. You just can't hurry that wise old Brocky into rash and impetuous de cisions. No, sir, he makes a memo and buries it two feet deep on his desk. Or better still, on the floor. The memo can then mature slowly into something mild and harmless, and after two years it can be safely thrown away.

Feathered Totems

Hir Peeps' Diary

Being A Chronicle Of Our Times

MONDAY, 10th-This week dawned blustery, so I put on my finest tunique of velvet, and a felt hat, and repaired to my place of business, which proved demm'd cold. I was much disturbed at news that Mistress Wyllie, she who directs the Art Centre, had been thrown by a horse and broken a hand; and I by a horse, and broken a hand; and pray God it doth not restrict her art. This afternoon I gathered with many amiable journalists, and we tilted a glass at Master Roy Thorsen, who has this day become the father of a little girl. By and by to the hotel to meet Sir B. S. Vanstone, banker of renown from the east. was much fascinated with a bonnet worn by Mistress Cuthbert Holmes, which hath a stiff veil, and a ribband of grosgrain, but not as full as a fencer's mask. And this ingenious device enables her to see, and breathe, and talk, and sip from a glass, and use a cheroot, which she doth not, though it is becoming quite the fashion with ladies these times. So I predict many beauties of this city will be wearing similar devices on their faces before long. In leaving, I shook hands with Mistress Wootton, thiking her to be my hostess, Mistress Brown, which left me much stumbled and undone, but Lord! provided by Master Graham McCall, and it was most exquisite with stuffing and egg sauce.

TUESDAY, 11th-Now this day dawned raw, and bleák, and cold; at my place of business, I bellowed for heat, but it took a full hour to come through pipes. Comes to me by and by Master Cliff Denham, this city's handse Cliff Denham, this city's handsomest 72-year-old, dapper in brown suitings, stiff collar and pearl stickpin. We discoursed of a forthcoming play, "The Lady With a Lamp." being the chronicle of Florence Nightingale; the showing of which is bless'd by Their Majesties, and will provide moneys for the noble profession of nursing. In my mail sack arrives some maps from Master George I. Warren, together with three stickers of seagulis, with the message "Follow the Birds to Victoria." which I am advised to fasten to my carriage. Which I did, and they fild flying right off my carriage at the first touch of breeze. So I will post to Master Warren a bottle of glue. Thence home, where I addressed myself to most noxious duty: the preparation of a discourse on the growth of this land, full of statisticks and most obscenely dull. I quit at midnight, with an ake in my eves and head, and tossed for two hours until these figures would recede, releasing me to fitful repose.

WEDNESDAY, 12th-I lay late abed, listening to Master Ted Reynolds read the news, and found him sedate in this task, with none of the fine frenzy he doth mpart to sporting events. At the hotel, chatted with Master John deBurgh Payne, a gentleman of Winnipeg much occupied with the visit of Their Highnesses, and learned from him that M'sieu Houde, the jackanapes Mayor of Montreal, hath given $250,000 for their entertainment in his city. And I could not but wonder whether this droll fellow would advise the Prince and Princess that would advise the Prince and Princess that he hath been in gaol for advising his fellow-townsmen not to fight for King and Country. What a curious paradox this be! Comes to me anon Master Hans Gruber, much concerned about moneys for his orchestra, he suggesting a monthly fee of $2 would meet the layings-out; and it is little enough for these concerts of musique. By and by to Spencerhouse, where it is pleasant to see fine flowers where it is pleasant to see fine lowers, and leveling of ground by voluntary city work, much enhancing the beauty of this building. In the evening, to Oak Bay, to dine with graduates of Old McGill, a renowned temple of culture in the east. Now here were many excellent people: Mistress Hickman, a famed French linguist, who broadcasts to foreign lands: guist, who broadcasts to foreign lands; Dr. Charlotte Dohan, a blonde Glaswegian of rare medical skills, yet the mother of two children; Dr. Gavin Chisholm, who grows the finest roses this town do see; Master Bill Sheret, Master Alan Maclean, Master Joe Clearibue and many others. I was greatly tickled when Mistress Henry Esson Young, who hath quit this uni-versity in 1895, asked my opinion of a boxing joust this night between Turpin and Robinson; and express'd approval of Master Lovett, the new secretary of dedense. And it was clear that this : white-haired lady keeps abreast of the news with much perception, in a manner much commended to her juniors. day Master Hugh Pickett, an impressario from across the water, and we chatted of artists he will bring to this city anon. In the recital of which Master Pickett revealed that Mistress Katy Hepburn came to this city last year in Will Shakespeare's "As You Like It" simply because he wanted to see it on a sort of whim: she wanted to see it, on a sort of whim: which we much enjoyed, but her agents were vexed at the loss of monies in transporting the large number of players by barge across the water. So we will see no more grand spectacles from abroad, for some time, though Mistress Eva LeGalliene, a rare excellent actress. may visit with a company of six. At luncheon Master Willard Ireland discoursed most entertainingly on the history of this province. I twitted Master George Warren about his seaguils, and he charged me with licking the wrong side of his stickers, which made him to laugh uproariously. And the picture of me standing in the streets, with my long tongue drooling the while, was oafish, and simple, and blushed me to the pores. At this meeting they show'd a moving stereopticon of Vancouver Island but it was very fuzzy and made my eyes to ake. Anon at my place of business comes call-ing Mistress Lola Maxwell, most elegant in a pink suifing with purple flower, and we talked of adult education, which she directs with much charm and spirit. Thus insufferably warm, home for a piece of meat the size of a watch and an ear of corn, which was tough. I distened to some musique and took me early to bed.

THURSDAY, 13th-Comes to me this

FRIDAY, 14th-This afternoon I met gentleman on the streets, recently turned from a vacation at Eagle Crest, where the Prince and Princess will stay, and he proclaimed it to be a splendid lodge. But alas! one of the bed-springs did squeak, which he reported to the inn-keeper, and 'twill be soaped anon. Strolling through the streets, I waved to Master Rebel Mowat, a waggish barker who could be elected prime min-ister tomorrow if he'd but stand for office. By and by, I chatted with Master Jim Davies, the industrial commissioner, it grew so hot I took me home to a cooling shower and gentle repose, with but a single sheet to keep me warm.

Mail Without Stamps

The Canadian post office has taken a long while to arrive at the sensible decision that stampless mail will be sent back to the sender. If a return address is not indicated on the envelope, it will sent to the dead letter office.

Unfortunately, the officials of the department have decided that insufficient postage is a different matter, and that mail carrying less than the correct amount of postage will be delivered, and the receiver required to pay. Unhappily, the post office collects twice the amount of insufficient postage in such cases,

Just why a distinction should be made between no postage and enough is difficult to understand.

In some European countries the prac-tise has been for the carrier to take unstamped or insufficiently stamped mail, especially letters, back to the sender's address, which is supposed to be written on the envelope. The post office co-operates to assure that the addressee is not penalized for the sender's errors. That, it seems to us, is the fair way to deal with the whole problem.

This was not new to us, as we have been enduring these clouds of dust day

Bennett Says Odds Against Government

3 to 1 against the government in Esquimalt," W. A. C. Bennett, Independent M.L.A. for South Okanagan, told a meeting last night at Shawnigan Lake.

night at Shawnigan Lake.

He was supporting Commander
A. C. Wurtele, independent candidate in the Esquimalt by-election. Mr. Bennett contended a new political force had entered into the British Columbia scene.

This force, he stated, is an extraordinary complication of groups, including strong Liberal and Conservative units and a solid group of Social Credit free agents. Together they are help-ing the crusade, he declared. "I am told," he added, "that the betting is 3 to 1 against the goyernment in Esquimalt."

Mrs. Tilly Rolston, M.L.A., Vancouver-Point Grey, spoke scathingly of the "gentlemen in the ivory tower," British Columbia's members, who had assumed the powers properly be-longing to the Legislature. Commander Wurtele said his platform was for "sound democratic government and free enter-prise," He was firmly against autocratic dictatorial methods, particularly in hospital insurance ministration. "I want to see more collaboration between the Government's insurance department people and the hospitals," said the candidate.

Press notices of the report given by Canon Judd at the annual meeting of the general synod of the Church of England in Canada appear to have led some readers to the conclusion that Anglican-United Church union is a dead or dying

Actually, the opposite is the case-although it may be some years before any degree of organic union may be seen.

Many members of both churches have been disappointed at the slow progress made toward union, others are happy that committees are still active and working hard to ommittees are still active and working hard to find common meeting ground.

Hope of quick and complete integration of the two churches (which had never been held by any but the most wildly enthusiastic prounion people) vanished early in the negotiations. Had the talks been suspended then, as was advocated, the issue would probably have been very dead by now.

Seek 'Unity In Diversity'

Instead, separate committees within the churches and joint committees of both churches have continued to work on the problem, reporting to the highest Anglican and United Church councils at the yearly

The developing trend of the negotiations has been away from out-and-out organic union and toward the method of "unity in diversity" pioneered by the Canadian Council of Churches, the World Council of Churches and other national and international Leaders in both communions will emphasize, however, that they are not seeking simple co-operation; the end object is as great a degree of union as can be accomplished without damage to basic beliefs in either church. To the critical agnostic or the cynic who sees denominational differences as proof of "too much Churchianity and not enough Christianity," such a tempered approach to union may be scorned, but honest study of the question will put it in a better light Watchword: 'Slow But Sure'

Thoughtful members and adherents of both churches—and members of many other Christian communions—will point out that eradication of denominationalism among Protestants is not only a highly unlikely development, but a completely impractical

Protestant denominations and sects will continue to exist, to grow in number, and to fuse and merge, for the same reason that they began—because Protestantism is a creature of the Christian rebel, and there is no sign that his number grows less.

Whether or not the continual process of splintering within the church is essential to its growth—and such an argument can be made—there is no question that it will go on as long as men value free will, free speech and freedom of worship,

Movements toward unity between communions, such as the between the Anglican and United Churches, must necessarily be of slow growth, making allowances for differences in doctrine theology and the actual practises of worship and administ

Any narrowing of doctrine for the sake of unity contains the seeds of its own destruction. History teaches that such develop-ments inevitably result in an equal and opposite reaction—and another sect or denomination is born,

Honor Veteran Church Workers

An unusual story of service will be recognized at the Church of Our Lord tomorrow when Rev. and Mrs. T. H. Laundy are honored on the occasion of their 60th wedding anniversary. Mrs. Laundy, a daughter of Bishop Cridge, who founded the church, has been identified with its activities for over 80 years. Mr. Laundy came to Victoria as a young bank clerk, retired after over 40 years as a banker and entered the ministry. Still remarkably active despite his 85 years, Mr. Laundy will give the address at the special service tomorrow est son A. C. Laundy is flying from Ontario for the occasion, two other sons, C. E. and Edward Laundy, will come here from Vancouver. Still resident in Victoria are a daughter, Mrs. R. S. Forbes, and another son, Arthur, twin of Edward.

Sport Week

Arthur Mann, a writer (in private life a harmonica player) who was assistant to Branch Rickey in that great man's days in Brooklyn, has just published a book called "Baseball Confidential." Of all the books I've read with the word "confidential" in the title, this is the first that seemed to know what it was talking about.

What Mr. Mann's book proves is that baseball is in the hands of people who look like men but talk and act like children. The late A. G. Spalding once invaded the hotel room of Nick Young, a very old man, then president of the National League, and took from him by force a trunk containing the league's was a step in Mr. Spalding's comic-opera war against Andrew Freedman, a high Tammany roller, for control of the league. Mr. Freedman, in his turn, was given to jumping down on the field and ordering umpires to fire players and managers whom he didn't like.

Charles A. Comiskey and Ban Johnson were bosom' friends, until one day Mr. Comiskey got mad at Mr. Johnson, threw away a mess of fish the latter had sent him, and set out to wreck Johnson if he had to wreck the American League to do it. He almost consummated the parlay. Shufflin' Phil Douglas, a pitcher, brought on a famous baseball scandal because he was angered when a N.Y. Giant executive ordered a posse of detectives to take Phil to a sanitarium, we him there till he was wanted do by force, and leave him there till he was wrung dry;

Mr. Mann describes a special patch of baseball nonsense, which he knows from first hand experience, in "Baseball Confidential." The subtitle of the book is "Secret History of the War Among Chandler, Durocher, MacPhail, and Rickey." You will recall the gist of this "war": Happy Chandler threw Leo Durocher out of baseball (in 1947), for no recorded reason whatever, following a game in Havana at which two known gambiers sat in a box also occupied by Leland Stanford MacPhail, then president of the New York Yankees.

Happy, Have You Gone Mad?

Mr. Mann has not added to the known outlines of the case, though he fills in some interesting detail, particularly in the back-grounds of Rickey and Durocher, who are sympathetic characters in the book, and MacPhail, who is not. He can account no more than anyone else for Chandler's expelling of Durocher for the sins of MacPhail, Rickey and Charley Dressen unless it is thi mystic passage:

"The commissioner amazed us even more by producing from the inside pocket of his jacket a handwritten letter that . . . was from a big man, a . . . man in Washington whose admonitions could not be ignored . . . The commissioner reminded us that people could not be ignored... The commissioner reminded us that people like this could not be disregarded."

Apparently, it was the Washington outsider (now dead, according to Mr. Mann) who told Happy to outlaw Durocher, which in turn caused Mr. Rickey to exclaim "in a quavering, half-sobbing voice: 'Happy, what on earth is the matter with you?'"

A good question. But Mr. Rickey is not blameless. Mr. Mannadmits freely that it was Rickey who first involved Chardles is

Apparently, it was the Washington outsider (now dead, according to Mr. Mann) who told Happy to outlaw Durocher, which in turn caused Mr. Rickey to exclaim "in a quavering, half-sobing voice: Happy, what on earth is the matter with you?"

A good question. But Mr. Rickey is not blameless. Mr. Mann admits freely that it was Rickey who first involved Chandler in Durocher's life, who voluntarily asked for everything that happened in this squalid case, by begging Chandler to read Durocher a lecture on manners and morals, back in 1946.

This was disclosed by manager Ralph Baker last night after the Irish had been bopped 10-7 by Vancouver Combines in the fourth and series-equalizing game of the set here.

Realizing how important the venue of a possible seventh game might become Baker said he would approach civic and provincial officials today in this regard.

On the first vote, those wanting restoration of the pre-Tues-day co-operative status handed a defeat to the executive by getting before the convention a motion to reconsider the question by the slim majority of 117 to 116.

Then, when reconsideration did come up, President Percy Bengough delivered a speech on the executive's stand and promptly shut off debate from opponents. After a quick standing vote that was not counted, he declared the contest won in the executive's

UNTIL FIRST MOVE

Nor is it likely the U.S. Air Force will attack the Red bases in Manchuria in a "preventive" war to knock out the Communist air power before it can be used in Korea. The U.S. air might will not be hurled against Manchuria until the Reds make the first move.

The Reds are reported to have built up an air force in Man-churia which is about equal to U.S. air power in Korea. And responsible officials expect no quick victory if the Reds use this power.

One source made a guess that "it will take at least two weeks before we could control the air.' The air force in Korea has had ample warning against a-sneak attack and planes and equipmen are being dispersed at airfields to minimize losses in case an attack comes. One big advantage on the U.N. side would be the long distance which Red planes would be forced to fly to reach the combat

Arrival of the new stamp catabogues is usually looked on as the season-opener for philatelic activities, and collectors eagery await the chance of comparing the new quotations with the previous figures, to see if their treasures have enhanced in value during the year. This year Scott has sprung a surprise by bringing out the first volume of their standard catalogue a month earlier than usual. A glance through its pages shows that collectors of Canadian issues will not be disappointed, for quite a few items here and there have been raised in value. Nearly all the pence issues of Canada have gone up. The 12d black has moved from $1.850 to $2,000, the 7½d from $100 to $1.20, and the lower values show proportionate increases.

The only really important lot of B.N.A. stamps which might have come up for sale is the Lichienstein collection, but this has passed into the hands of the daughter, who is a keen collector herself. So from now on it seems as if the Canadian material is going to become searcer than ever. This, taken in conjunction with the fact that Ganada's buying power is going up by leaps and bounds, will doubtless cause the upward trend to continue for some time to come.

To revert to the new catalogue one notes that the 2c green of 1868 on laid paper, which had its initial public showing at our exhibition last May is now priced for the first time, being quoted at $5,000. Brit. ish Columbia shows a few increases, ish Columbia shows a few increases, though one stamp, the $1 perfor ated 14, drops from $100 to $85. Newfoundland remains stationary as might have been expected. The recently discovered new variety in the postage dues (10c on water marked paper) has not been listed

As it takes 3 months to print the new catalogues, they are never really up to dage even on the day that the two new Borden and King stamps, as well as the 2c olive and 4c vermilion are unlisted yet. Also, the 50c O.H.M.S. "Logging" is priced as if current, at 90c, whereas it pow fetches $5.00 in Toronto!

Managers Should Have Faith In Pitchers Build Confidence By Showing It-Lopez

Pirst of a series of chapatches by managers of leading major league clubs. By AL LOPEZ Indians' Manager

Connie Mack and other pundits long have held that pitching is from 75 to 90 per cent of baseball.

I wouldn't attempt to say just what portion it is of the game, but it's a mightly big one.

Look at the Indians.

Once a manager is blessed with a capable staff, he should take great care to handle it properly.

This is the most important thing in connection with managing.

Once a manager has faith in his pitchers he should build their confidence by showing it.

A manager should build this staff gradually. Three starters are sufficient in the spring, Add a fourth as the weather gets better. During the hot months, with double-headers pibling up, you add a fifth, perhaps

I was especially interested because I had been reading Max Mulber's writing on India, and some of the translations of the Upanishads, and wanted to learn Sanscrit. But as I should have had to master Greek first, I gave up the idea. It was in 1907 when the small, first contingent of Hindus arrived, and they were unknown on the coast. Their ship had already docked when we got off the street car, and the new arrivals were sitting quite by themselves outside one of the sheds in the inadequate protection of the overhanging roof.

They were a forlorn looking lot, sad-eyed and silent. No doubt they had been led to believe that they would find Victoria warm and sunny. They wore only cotton clothing, the rain dripping, from their soaked turbans, and falling on the pathetic bundles beside them which contained all they possessed. According to Hookam Singh, a fine-looking elderly Sikh whom I met the other day and whose nationality was unmistakable in spite of his smart English gabardine suit (and besides he wore a turban), there were only thirty or forty in that first small company. I am sure that most people who saw them were quite convinced that they would sicken and die very quickly in a climate so different from the heat and calm of the

He most decidedly did not know anything about his job, but he was more than eager to learn.

He must have been still in his teens, for though nearly six feet tail, he had only the first sproutings of a beard. He wore a majenta colored turban and his name was Jenta Singh. His dark eyes were gentte and his broad smile brilliant. Like so many of the Sikhs he had splendid teeth, no doubt due to their vegetarian diet. I should like to know if he is still in Victoria and what he is doing now.

He always had a small brass bowl with him when he came to the plouse for bread and rice and anything else of our food that his caste permitted him to eat. He carried his provisions away off by himself, perhaps so our shaddows would not fall across them. He learned to milk and do other jobs. But he did not know very much about eggs or

Charles Litwidge Dodgson (Carrolls real name) and another Oxford Don took three children rowing up the River Isis one July afternoon, 1862, and how Dodgson, to annue his companions, told them a story, making it up as he went along. The children were entranced with the story and one of them (10-year-old Alice Liddell) begged him to write it.

Dodgson sat up all night in his monastic college quarters and produced the first draft of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland.

It was the outpouring of a strange genius—a genius that had been focussed on this one work as the sun's rays can be concentrated by a glass, and Florence Lemon has sitted the facts of his life through a fine mesh in search of the spark from which the brilliance glowed.

She finds her clues in the parson age where he was born, in his formal education at Rugby and Oxford, in his hobbles—the theatre in a distant way, and photography—in his religious and optilical beliefs, his mellect and his heart.

He loved children, particularly liftle gris, but took no interest in them when they grew up. Holy orders were a prerequisite to his post and Dodgson was almost forced into, a vow of celibacy for good measure.

In Recent Autobiography Setting A New Standard By PETER ELIOT

Departing from the conventional style of autobiography ("a morass of ancestors, nurses, governesses, etc.") Stephen Spender has written a book around 'the great interests of his life—politics, poetry, Germany, art, travel and friendship. It is the delicate personal account of the early years of a poet (who started to write at 15 is now only 42), his compeers, W. H. Auden, Christopher Isherwood, Virginia and Leonard Woolf, his uncle, J. A. Spender, his mentor; T. S. Eliot, and many others.

"The Bored Meeting," by Harry Symons. The Ryerson Press, To-ronto, 121 pages; $2.50. Harry Symons, the author, gives every indication of being Mr. Average Ciffren, with an added gift of being able to record the every-day problems and events in Mr. A. C.'s

In world within world, Spender tells a story about another famous poet, Walter de la Mare. An old friend had been to visit him and was a little disconcerted occause he asked dozens of questions throughout the whole afternoon without ever waliting for an answer. As he was leaving, the friend reflected sadly: "Affer all, de la Mare is getting old." At the door de la Mare sadl: "I know I have asked many questions this afternoon and never waited for an answer. But don't you agree that it's much more important to ask questions than answer. But don't you agree that it's much more important to ask questions than 10 market hem?"

After the war. Spender went to the United States to visit his old acronics Auden and Isherwood, who had left England for America in 1939. He, also, with Robert Lowell, paid a visit to Exar Pound, then confined to hospital in Washington, D.C. "Here, amongst the lumatics," writes Stephen Spender, "Pound seemed a genial and henevolent host, receiving us with the same courage as he might have done at his home in Italy, and talking of literature and personalities. I asked him whether he remembered the visit of Yeasts to Rapalio. He looked at me and said: 'If you want me to talk about Yeasts I shall do so, but you must give me 24 hours' notice, as the top layer of my mind is gone." The reference to Rapalio is now a famous incident in the literary world. Yeasts had written "The Tower" and had taken the manuscript to Rapalio. From his hotel there he sent if to Pound with a note explaining that he had written moetry for some years; that he was writing in a new style; that if this were not an improvement on his past work, he was too old now to hope to develop in another direction. For these reasons he was anxious to know Pound's opinion of them. A day or so later he received a post-card with written on it the one word: 'Putrid, E. P."

"Economically," muses Spender, "T found that there is much in common between the career of a writer and that of a gambler. Work-of the same quality and even about the same quality and even about the same quality and even sometimes pays extremely well.

The little guy has put in his first morning at manual train-It's a sort of coming-ofage in grade school life and he's enthusiastic about the course. They have real tools at manual and they're going o let him use them.

You wonder, when he says hat, if you ought to feel guilty or not letting him use the tools that were in the basement — not the good ones, anyhow. Then you remember that you couldn't find your favorite hammer after he'd borrowed it, and you recolstott and you recollect that he thought it quite feat when he'd cut through a nail in a piece of beachwood with the old saw you lent him. So you tell yourself that you just haven't had time to teach the little guy how to use tools. Now that he's going to manual he'll learn how to manipulate them and how to care for them, and when he's a little more proficient, the equipment will still be in the basement.

YOU'LL FIND, TOO, that the boy's enthusiasm takes you back a few years to the day when you were introduced to wood-work. You'll recall the excite-ment of the small bench and its vise, the wooden mallet, the leather-capped chisels, the small jack-plane and the try-square that were to be yours for that Of Royal Pair that were to be yours for that class. Up till then you hadn't bothered, as a kid, to prepare your material. If you wanted to make something, you'd have picked up a hunk of wood, worked on it with a saw and hammered the pieces together with nails. You'd be impressed by the fact that your finished article—if you fin-ished it—wasn't too stable, and you probably realized you'd left something undone. But it didn't occur to you that you'd tried to jump into manufacturing at the second or third stage without taking the first step. tive Buildings will be in good shape," he said as he watched power shovels at work on Su-

UP AT BOYS' Central, where we were taught woodwork, Mr Plenderleith, a strict but fair teacher, hammered the lesson in "Plane face side, test and mark." Eventually you got into the habit of planing the face side, testing and marking, and then squaring the face edge. After that, the jobs you did seemed to stick together a little better — even when you grew amarter and learned how to fill in a mistake with a mixture of sawdust and glue.

You went on up through the old course, making a window prop for which there was no use in your home putting to use in your home, putting to-gether a scissors holder that was gether a scissors holder that was never hung up in the kitchen, doing chisel and gouge work on an inkstand which the fountain pen had already made obsolete. You grew in proficiency and stature to the point where you made a footstool that probably didn't fit in with the rest of the furniture in your house, and furniture in your house, and you graduated on up into the hexagonal taboret class.

And you could have developed a philosophy at the same time, had you been mature enough. You were too young to appreciate it then, but you could wrap a sermon around that "Plane face side, test and mark" today. If you stop to consider it, you'll admit we're too ready to jump into projects physical. to jump into projects, physical, mental or spiritual, without planing the face side, testing planing the face side, testing and marking, and then squaring our timber. We don't bother preparing our materials before we start building. Then, oddly enough, we wonder why our product comes out a little shaky, set quite true in the loints why not quite true in the joints, why, even with glue and sawdust, the mistakes in it show.

Still, the little guy won't be worrying about the philosophical side of woodwork for a while. They're going to let him use real tools, and that's enough for the time being.

Attention! Ready! Go! . . . This is the call already issued to many girls' and women's organizations in Victoria.

For in September summer vacations become a memory, and a mountain of work that needs willing hands and skillful direction calls a challenge throughout feminine ranks.

Programs for the winter season cover a multitude of activities . . . in fact so numerous are the phases of these activities, no girl or woman in the city can say, "I cannot find anything that really interests me!" There is work for everyonein large or small groups—and every group has a service project of interest.

With The Symphony Society

Women's committee of the Victoria Symphony Society is looking for new members. Mrs. D. B. Roxborough, the chairman, explains that it has been decided to divide the membership into active and associate members and to strive to bring the active group nearer to 200. At present total membership is 70.

Plans for a telephone bridge and social evening on Sept. 24 have been completed. Other events throughout the season will include a November rummage sale, the annual symphony ball in February, a garden party and several novelty events based on work of the Winnipeg Symphony women's committee.

Autumn Plans At The 'V'

Are you looking for a new hobby, new friends? Then, visit the Y.W.C.A. next-Wednesday evening. It's annual "open house" commencing at 8. "Y" hostesses will be there to greet guests and members. This Looks Like Inflation

Algoma Steel Share Values Rise 4,250 Per Cent In 10 Years

By HARRY YOUNG, Times Business Editor

This has been another extraordinary week in the stock markets. There has been feverish activity-with Toronto making an average turnover of 5,000,000 shares a day-and the prices have advanced as if there was no such thing as a ceiling.

It is getting mighty close to it. Without enter-course, has acted as an encouragement to scad everything higher.

Mr. St. Laurent's reiteration of this Ottawa dogma is not entirely responsible for the latest still in top demand, and with so market builsnness. Even in the States where the big companies out of the good earth, everything States where the big companies have nothing like so much latitude in the matter of prices as their contemporaries do on this side of the border, the stock side of the border, the stock small amounts carefully in the prices at Wall Street have adearly stages of the war. vanced almost as rapidly as they have done on Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver.

TWO EXCEPTIONS

The reason behind the advance is simple. Trade, with one or tv. notable exceptions, is boom-ing, and to offset higher taxes and wages, manufactured articles $56, they were split five for one. are commanding such tremendous prices that company profits in their divided form have again continue to soar.

The two exceptions are the and are selling at over $60. automobile makers and the man- over $60. ufacturers of higher priced household goods. These are the industries which in the words of Rhys M. Sale, president of Ford of Canada, are bearing the brunt of the government's measures to control inflation.

At the moment the automobile adustry is suffering from the aftermath of bad overdose of buying last winter that antici-pated the credit controls and the sed excise tax on automobiles. The phase will certainly pass, and the sped of the revival may depend largely upon the automobile manufacturers thenselves.

A great many people will agree with Mr. Sale that the automobile today is no longer a necessity. Those same people want to have a car which will give reasonable service, and they would be quite willing to do without a lot of the flashy chrome and needless geegaws that go with the regular models. TABLES REVEAL WEEK'S UPWARD MARKET SWING

All sections of the Canadian and United States markets advanced during the week, and in some groups the recently-established new highs reached new peaks.

Industrials were particularly active. The Dow Jones average reached 276,37, its highest since 1930, on Thursday, while Toronto closed last night at a new peak of 360.28. Base metals and western oils also finished right at their best, while on Montreal the paper-pulp index was at a new high for 1951.

Sept. 6 on its way home to Vancouver by train). This outstanding choir, founded in 1932 by C. E. Findiater, has undoubtedly done more to publicize this province, musically, in the British Isles than any other similar aggregation. The choir first went to England in 1934 under the sponsorship of the United Church of Canada, and two years later, visited Norway. After an interruption during the war, they resumed their travels in 1949 and the war, they resumed their revisited England and Wales ed their travels in 1949 an Originally all the members of the choir came from Vancouver, but this year a number of young singers from other points in the province were included to increase the scope of the tour's good-will effort and to direct the interest of British people towards the province as a whole rather than to any one city. The choir of 26 young singers, whose ages vary from 10 to 20 years, left on their toup in June under the leadership of their founder.

He estimated the rasp-berry, strawberry and logan yield was only 48 per cent of normal, although of high quality.

Negro Quads Born Within Six Minutes

BALTIMORE (AP)-A set of Negro quadruplets hustled into the world today in six minutes of delivery time to join five other fatherless brothers and sisters. Doctors said the quads were about six weeks premature. Quads occur in approximately one out of 600,000 births.

The mother, 31-year-old Mrs Susie Avance, gave birth to a boy just nine months ago.

Mother and the babies, two boys and two girls, are "getting along well enough for the present," city hospital officials said last night.

Lack Of Doctors Held Not Serious

It is up to communities in-olved to interest doctors in starting practises, public health officials comment on the lack of resident doctors at Sooke and the Gulf Islands.

The two areas have had no resident physician for the past three months. According to the provincial de-partment of health, no agency has the power to place doctors in these areas. They added the situation had not yet become
